Dunk Into This Dairy Dip

Spur-of-the-moment snacks are an all-American eating habit. People pause from office work, gardening, television, games and crafts to pick up a chip or dunk a vegetable stick into an assortment of creamy dips.

While the origin of chips-and-dip may be unknown, its popularity is unquestioned, says Pauline Mairs, extension nutritionist at Iowa State University. Dips add informality to entertaining, a chance for impromptu gatherings with friends over the back fence, on the patio or in the park.

If dips are made with cheese, they offer a nutritional bonus along with good taste, says Mrs. Mairs. The dairy product base supplies protein and calcium.

Calorie watchers may be wise to choose raw vegetable dippers, so plentiful in summertime, instead of those snack crackers and potato chips. You can use raw cauliflower, zucchini, cucumbers, green peppers and cherry tomatoes with this:

Curried Broccoli-Cheese Dip
1 10-oz. package frozen broccoli in cheese sauce
¼ cup dairy sour cream
2 Tbsps. grated parmesan cheese
2 Tbsps. lemon juice
1 tsp. instant minced onion
¼ tsp. curry powder

Prepare broccoli in cheese sauce according to package directions. Pour broccoli mixture into blender. Add remaining ingredients. Cover and blend until mixture is smooth. To blend flavors, refrigerate until thoroughly chilled. Makes 1 and ½ cups.
